

An Agent of Change

Change is a process through which something becomes different. To affect change, we must act to make a difference, by exchanging our polarities for a shared humanity. In our humanity, there is balance. Nature wins due to the balance it maintains; as mere mortals we fail in our attempts to wield this power. The cold air at dawn on a winter's morning, lilies in springtime bloom, the tune of an ice-cream van as summer proceeds and golden leaves as they fall, bringing the heat to its knees. A cycle of seasons, beautiful in their glory, with seamless transitions, despite the complexity of change.

The elements in solitude are masters of their craft, in synergy our world is timed, our souls healed, spirits fulfilled. Individually, wind, earth and fire are glorious, together they produce change. Let us simplify change, seek first to master the self, unearth the pain seated in the depths of our hearts and rediscover our light. Standing firm our light, understanding our light will produce the empathy we need to see ourselves in one another. That is how our communities, societies and world transform; that is how you become an agent of change.