Variety is the Spice of Life!

Different Schools... ....Different Rules

– Can you use ‘I’ in an academic text?
– Should an essay have section headings?
– How long is a report?
– Do you use primary or secondary research?
– Footnotes, endnotes or no notes?
– Harvard style referencing or MLA? What about APA?

Which school are you in? What is acceptable and what is unacceptable in your field?

Always check in your module handbooks or with your tutor if you are concerned about appropriacy
Report Writing Workshop Aims

• Gain insight into the characteristics of typical reports
• Learn about and reflect on own writing process
• Look at some possible structures of reports and possible school differences
• Address the language of reports
There are multiple types of reports

- Lab report
- Business report
- Case study report
- Technical design report

Although there are different types of reports, in general, an academic report is a piece of informative writing, an act of communication and an account of an investigation (Reid, 2012).

An academic report aims to sell a product, idea or points of view (Van Emden and Easteal, 1995).

It should inform, explain and persuade (Williams, 1995) by using well-organised research.

Sometimes it will provide recommendations.
Remember that the intended reader (tutor, business reps, peers, etc.) must be clearly identified at an early stage.

Features of continuity

One of the most important challenges that students face when writing a report is ensuring there is \textit{consistency across the document}. This is particularly important when writing group reports. Despite being structured in sections, a report should:

\textit{look like a single coherent document}

- a \textit{single visual style} should be used [e.g. font, line-spacing, underlining of headings]
- \textit{justify margins}

\textit{read like a single coherent document}

- sections should be \textit{linked} (bridging)
- \textit{information, and approaches} to it, must be \textit{unified}
- writing style should be \textit{consistent}
